

University of Granada (Spain)

Universidad de Granada

The University of Granada has a range of different services that provide infrastructure and support for e-learning in both central and local settings. Through these different projects the University of Granada has reached a considerable expertise in the design, management and pedagogical and technological implementation of international on-line courses. It has participated in a very big number of transnational projects in this regard in Europe and worldwide. Regarding Water Treatment technologies and policies, Institute for Water (IW) was created by University of Granada in 1990 to centralize scientific and technical research and learning issues about water aspects. This institution has 69 members including university members, CSIC (Spanish National Council for Research) and pre- and postdoctoral researchers and students. The institute is integrated by six research groups with more than 70 Senior researchers, who have developed 68 national project and 31 international projects.